Side, and we have sometimes thought we could write an Under-Side—that might contain revelations not brought to light in either of these volumes. Miniaters have troubles enough, it is true, but those the churches and moddlesome deacons.—

They often come from each other. With sorrow we confess it, there is among minsorrow we confess it, there is among ministers, as in every other professional class, an unworth jealousy of the reputation and mittee. success of those who are more popular .times mark with puin a disposition to criticise and disparage, rather than to approve, and to rejecte in their success. We know sincere and good men, who are yet so extremely sensitive to their own reputations, that they cannot bear to hear anybody praided but themselves—as if what ever was added to another's fame was so unwilling to concede the talents of superior men. It a disjonant is a concede the talents of superior men. It a disjonant is a concede the talents of superior men. It a disjonant is a concede the talents of superior men. I ask again, what is happiness? It aint bein' idle, that's a fact—no idle man or search the midst of a beautiful and fertile country to be a some a greater indicement for the Capitalist is the States woman was ever happy, since the world begin. If a distinguished preacher is nomed, they throw in abstements to qualify the general praise. These criticisms may be just, but they seem to be made in an unbrotherly spirit. Nor that this jealousy is peculiar to one profession. Ou the con trary, we think mini-ters have far less of it than either lawyers or doctors, for they do not so often come into close contact as immediate rivals. But it is a portion of human infirmity which cleaves even to good men, and which stains the whiteness of their garmen's.

Lait not time to have done with this mis-The world is wide enough for us all. A hody of men, organized and combined for a great moral end, ought to be animated by the noblest passions and by the most generous spirit towards each other. Comrades in war, brave companious in arms, they ought to be so intent on the general victory, as to forget their petty claims for promotion. In the Christian Church there is ample space for thousands of the gifted good? The more strong men we have in the pulpit the botter. Our numbers are all too few for the battle we have to fight. We hail, therefore, every mighty man as a new champion in the Christian host, and our hearts swell with joy as we see a fresh young giant rushing nto the battle. All honor to the learned and eloquent, whose pons and tongues are wielded in the service of truth. Mo thumbly do we give thanks to God, whenever we see a min of power rising up in one of our cities. Our hope for the Church revives, as we think how many such are scattered over the land; and when one by one they depart, we mourn their death, and pray that God would raise up others of equal courage to fight over the same battles for the next generation .- New York Evangelist.

A SHORT CHAPTER ON SLEEP,-If one thinks of it, says the Brooklyn Eagle, sleep in a great city is a queer thing. Think of fifty thousand in this city all sleeping as a Know Nothing, by 130 majority. at once. Fifty thousand in tiers, one, two, three, four, five deep-from cellar to garret. Filty thousand in rows a mile long .-Fire thousand in the red night caps-tasmed with a sail needle, and some uncapped altogether, with locks dishevelled, and ruilled like 'quils upon the fretful porcupine.' Five thousand snoring alto, five thousand enoring bass. Five thousand under rags. Twenty thousand under calico. A hundred or so beneath silk. We are informed that the materials used in the manufacture of these bricks are simply lime and sand, the proportion being about eleven parts sand, to one part lime, and they can be manufactured at a less cost than our common claybricks. The bricks can of course be made of any shape or form according to taste It is fully equal to sandstone. The ad vantages are the facilities with which they are meaufactured; lathing and plastering becomes unnecessary, and the outside and inside of the wall are made at one time. The chemical change which takes place in the manufacture of the bricks hardens them so that they are not more affected by the simosphere than stone.
